"Manslaughter" is a peach of an idea—if only Mr. de Mille and Miss Mac-Pherson had been content to let it go as a story told for the entertainment value. But, Lord no! They must hammer and preach and "point a moral" at every turn instead of being satisfied to "adorn a tale." As a matter of fact they do not deserve to have the co-operation of dear, attractive people like Tommy Meighan and Leatrice Joy, They ought to be made to put up with—well, certain parties we could mention if we wished.

This young District Attorney which Mr. Meighan was impersonating had a Roman complex, so that every time he wished to illustrate a story or plead a case he would hark back to the time of Nero and say "These jazz-mad debauchees of to-day are like unto the debauchees who debauched in the debaucheries of Rome," which was a signal for the property men to drag out all of their old tiger rugs and their real, live

"They say"

THEY say bobbed hair is going out of style; they say sleeves are to be tight and long; they say that a certain drama is the season's best play; they say A's new book is a milestone in the making of American literature.

They say this and they say that, touching on one subject, speaking authoritatively about another.

Who are they? Where do they come from? Where do they go?

The source and origin of "they say" is seldom accurately traceable. Sometimes it comes from the pages of magazine or newspaper. Again it reaches you through the words of a friend. Or perhaps it originates with a group of well-informed people whose concrete opinion is highly valued.

That little phrase "they say" has tremendous power. Its influence extends beyond any imaginable horizon.

"They say" is Public Opinion.

When the things they say are favorable about one drama, one style, one painting, one book-then you consider that thing successful.

Advertising is an intentional moulding of Public Opinion. And the more people hear, see, or read about your product or service, the more they will say the things that make it a success.

Would you care to talk with us about how this is brought about?
